Estate Litigation

It can be a very stressful time when someone passes away or requires end-of-life care. Family members and those who love them may make emotional decisions that negatively impact the fair outcome of the administration of the estate of an incapable or deceased loved one.

Imagine . . .

- Your spouse has died and you discover that no provision has been made for you.
- You are an executor of an estate and beneficiaries of the estate are making accusations that personal effects have gone missing.
- Your mother is in palliative care and her power of attorney or caregiver has placed arbitrary and unreasonable restrictions on you visiting her.
- Your parent died and you thought the Will he or she made 10 years ago was the last one only to find a new Will was made just weeks before he or she passed away.
- You are an executor and a family member or other individual who was excluded from the Will is threatening to make a claim against the estate.
- You are the ex-spouse of a deceased who you and/or your children were receiving support payments from prior to his death. Are you still entitled to any money?
- Your sibling was power of attorney for a parent. Upon the death of the parent you have information suggesting that funds have been significantly depleted.

Elder financial abuse, visitation restrictions, depletion of assets, undue influence, fraud, forgery, dependent support claims, arbitrary and unreasonable demands: as outrageous as it may seem these are not exceptional circumstances. In Estate Litigation these are the types of concerns that people face every day.

Legal Partners You Can Trust

We know how hard it is to deal with these complicated and sensitive issues during such trying times. Care, treatment and end-of-life decisions are never easy. When formal conflict resolution is required or litigation is inevitable, who do you turn to for sound advice?

At Pallett Valo we act for estate administrators, beneficiaries and other parties on the disposition of estate assets, will challenges, guardianship applications, and consent and capacity hearings. Whatever the dispute, we have the compassion, expertise and legal prowess to advance our client's goals when it comes to managing the legal and financial affairs and other fiduciary responsibilities inherent to Estate Litigation.
